Train Styles

Cathedral: (Also known as a Monarch Train); a cascading train extending six to eight feet behind the gown, for the most formal weddings.	Extended or Royal: A train that is longer than four feet in length. One of the most notable examples of an extended train is Princess Diana's wedding gown.
Court: A train extending one foot beyond the sweep train.	Sweep Train: The shortest train, barely sweeping the floor.
Chapel: The most popular of all train lengths, it flows from three to four feet behind the gown.	Watteau Train: A train falling from the shoulder blades to the hemline of the gown.

Bodice Neckline Styles

Halter Neck: This style for brides who have a reasonable bust slims down the waistline by elongating torso. A variation to this style is high neckline.	Empire Line: This style ends below the bust line, where skirt begins. Creating an illusion the skirt is much longer. Style is flattering for pregnant brides.
Strapless: This style opens up shoulders, chest and neck area. Very feminine and extremely flattering. Some more complicated necklines (eg., scooped) require support to maintain shape. The back of the bodice is a little lower than the front. With straps can have a deep back.	Scooped, Square or Boat Neckline: The boat neck is the distinct linear seam from one shoulder across to the other. This is very elegant. Square is, well, square... whereas the scoop is curved. Both styles work with a lower neckline. These styles open the chest & neck area.
Sweetheart: The Sweetheart neckline was very popular back in the 1980's, worn with the big puffy sleeves. The bodice must have sleeves. The love heart shaped neckline is very soft and innocent. It is often a style chosen by the younger or more conservative bride.	Shear: This style whereby a sheer fabric layer such as organza or chiffon is sewn over the top of the gown. A popular style is to have a boat neckline which compliments the linear top edge of the strapless bodice (above the bust). This style can be with sleeves, sheer or solid fabric.
Spaghetti Straps: Same as the strapless, difference being that you can wear a bodice which plunges far lower at the back. Style emphasises the neck and chest area. A delicate layer of satin or a string of gorgeous crystals, pearls will enhance the shoulder. Alternately, style support structure into bodice to support fuller bust and taper in at your waist.	Plunging Neck: Whilst this style looks like the halter neck, more versatile as can have straps or sleeves sitting on the shoulders. This opens the neck and chest area more making it more versatile to a broader frame. This style does not emphasis the shoulders nor the bust as prominently as the halter neck.

Gown Styles

Ball Gown:

It is VERY flattering, when worn with the right style bodice. Skirts are bell shape. Can be made from any material with tulle and/or a hoop underneath. They can also be very heavily gathered or pleated at the waistline.

This style skirt can be made entirely of tulle, with no other fabric. This gives soft romantic look. This is a young style, very pretty and classic.

Sheath:

It is very classy and elegant; the skirt is simply fitted at the hips and falls straight down to the floor.

You can have an attachment that ties around the waist like a wrap around skirt and this can be your train. This is very pretty.

This style suits the bride that has a healthy figure. Not necessarily need to be slim and petite, but you do need a reasonably firm shape and a reasonably slim waist.

A Line:

This style is very simple and elegant. It suits brides of all shapes and sizes. The A-Line can be slender and narrow or it can be wide and flowing requiring a hoop. Remember, you want to create an illusion of being tall and slim.

Soft:

If you want a dress that falls softly without a particular 'style' structure. This gown does not have waistline, and can be either empire line or seamless. It will be fitted at the bodice, and flows naturally and softly from the waist or hips downward.

This style is elegant, and feminine, and very flattering for all brides. This design highlights the curves, and with suitable bodice, this style will be most flattering.

Mermaid and Fish Tail:

Mermaid style is fitted at the waist and the hips; flaring out delicately at the base of the skirt below the knee. This skirt hugs at the waist and hips, flaring from knee downward.

The fish tail is the mermaid style skirt with an extension of fabric at the bottom of the skirt at the back – effectively a small train. Styles suit the bride that has a slim to medium build and bust.

This style is elegant with a low cut back. This emphasises the figure and accentuates the curvature of the back and hips.

Princess:

Traditional version of this gown is a strapless A-Line. Now there are many variations you can have pleats, shoulder straps, and more. The distinct feature of the princess style gown is the fitted bodice and waist which continue on to the A-Line Skirt.

This style is very flattering for brides as it is simple and elegant, and this creates the illusion of height.. To make it work, you need to have some bust. Strapless is not the most appropriate option if you are big busted. Does not suit the small busted bride.
